SECMOL - Students' Educational And Cultural Movement Of Ladakh

Local and Organic Food

Garden strip

We try to produce as much of our own food at SECMOL as we can. We still do have to buy a lot of supplies from the market, but we try to grow as much as possible, then buy from farmers in Ladakh, and finally what we can't get from Ladakh at all, we buy from Leh market. Students and staff learn every year from each other and from the practical experience.

Organic Gardens and Trees

When SECMOL first came to this location it was a completely barren plateau above the Indus River. Now gardens and several thousand trees are making it green. Water has always been the limiting factor but the greenery expands every year. We use manure from our own cows and composting toilets, and have never used chemical fertilisers or pesticides.

Our own dairy

For the women and making sure they have food and water, and when needed taking the cows. Most of the kitchen food waste is happily eaten by the cows.

Preserving food for winter

The roads connecting Ladakh to the rest of India close for 4 or 5 months of winter, and there are no vegetables for sale from outside of Ladakh during those months.

We can buy locally stored root vegetables such as carrots, potatoes and turnips, and also use store ourselves in an underground root cellar.

As much as we can in our greenhouses, but in winter they are best for producing leafy green vegetables. In spring we start seedlings for the gardens in the greenhouses.
